Review:

Guess How I Feel? is a great game for teaching children about feelings. The game comes with 50 situation cards that show pictures of scenarios that will elicit a variety of emotions. It also comes with a dry erase magnetic mirror, dry erase markers, and magnetic eyes and mouths that display different emotions. Each player gets a turn to pick a card and use the dry erase board to make a face depicting how the scenario makes them feel. Other players draw a picture on small pads depicting how they think the player feels. Thus, the child gets experience with expressing their own feelings as well as understanding the feelings of others. The magnetic eyes and mouths are shaped differently to depict a wide range of emotions, helping children learn to visually identify the emotions. This game is wonderful for all children, but is especially well-designed for any child who has difficulty interpreting the feelings of others.
